Multidisciplinary management of multiple primary cancers in first-degree relatives. Multiple primary cancers (MPC) occur in about 5% of cancer cases. Although family aggregation of cancer can be explained by genetic and environmental factors, only a small proportion of MPC are familial. This study examined the proportion of MPCs in a population-based sample of 489 first-degree relatives of 295 cancer patients diagnosed in a screening program and treated in the same institute. The rates of MPCs were 9.0%, 17.0%, 28.1%, and 50.9% for the relatives of four, three, two, and one affected relatives, respectively. The rate of MPCs was significantly higher in the relatives of probands with breast (24.4%) or ovarian (29.8%) cancer compared with probands with prostate (10.6%), colorectal (11.8%), or thyroid cancer (5.4%). These data indicate that some of the genetic predisposition to cancer and family history of cancer may be of importance to the risk of MPCs. The second thing I do is check the online Amazon reviews for the same recipe. While some like this type of beef, most people question whether a recipe will yield enough beef. Think of it this way: If a recipe calls for 10 pounds of beef, will you get 10 pounds? How
